THIRTIETH SUNDAY, ORDINARY TIME

FIRST READING Exodus 22: 20-26

Israel is reminded of her captivity in Egypt and challenged to use this experience as a guide in her treatment of aliens, the oppressed, the poor, and the powerless. If they were strangers in the land of Egypt, now they must treat with kindness the stranger in their own land. Her compassion must mirror that of the Lord's, who showed compassion to her in her need.

SECOND READING 1 Thessalonians 1: 5-10

The example of Paul's way of life had led the Thessalonians to imitate him as he had imitated Christ. They received the word with the joy of the Holy Spirit, despite the inevitable oppression which the just must suffer at the hands of the impious. By imitating him, they become an example for the provinces round about. The good news is spread by the witness of one's life..

GOSPEL Matthew 22: 34-40

Here a Pharisee lawyer, trained in theology, asks Jesus which is the most basic of the six hundred and thirteen laws and observances. The two great commandments as Jesus gives them are from Dt 6: 4-5 and Lv 19: 18. Where Jesus differs from other rabbis is that he places the twofold commandment side by side, and insists that true love of God must be enfleshed in the love of our neighbour. He makes such love the single command of the new covenant.
